Job of Undergraduates: 'Take Care of Clarke'

"Take care of Clarke. It's meant much to the class of '62." These words, borrowed from the recent senior program, accurately express the feelings of this year's graduates.

Through the years we have learned to know and love Clarke. We have worked in two student government congresses to improve and strengthen our college. It is our hope that these improvements will remain as a basis for future

But now it's up to you. You are the ones to decide whether our honor system will live. You are the ones who must uphold academic standards through achievement. You are the ones who must hold a student congress next spring.

It is through this congress that the most effective measures can be taken. Remember this when you nominate your delegates. Decide which phases of campus life need revision and then work to improve them. Only diligent, self-sacrificing work will yield a beneficial congress.

We leave you with the advice of Archbishop Byrne: "Don't let Clarke disappear from the American scene." Keep it alert and forward moving. Take care of Clarke for us and for yourself in the years ahead.

—Patricia Lyman

Ivory Towers Crumble:

Church Gains Volunteers

As Clarke explodes the "ivory tower" myth, reverberations will be felt throughout the Church. Over 30 students are world-conscious enough to choose personal sacrifice for the sake of the entire Mystical Body.

For the summer-12 have volunteered to serve as catechists in the west. One will work at the medical center in Lourdes. One will aid the lay apostolate as a Grail volunteer.

For the year-six seniors plan to teach in North American mission areas as Extension Lay Volunteers.

For life-12 Clarke girls have applied for admission to missionary and teaching orders and plan to enter these religious communities between now and Oc-

Whether it is to give a summer, a year or a lifetime, each of these decisions represents deep and unselfish concern for the needs of the modern world. Each is a choice to put the words and ideas of commons, dinnertable and seminar discussions into positive action. Each is a resolution, not to talk of world problems, but to do something about them.

Let us pray that their sacrifice will be fruitful in the life of the Church by their action and in our lives by their example.

—Florence Smyth

Thoughtfulness Lifts Spirits, Counteracts Discouragement

Complimenting another person is simply practicing the Christian virtue of charity, a point which Anne Culkin brought out in her charm course in April. It is the direction of our attention to someone besides ourselves.

Most of us find it second nature to make the common remarks: "Your hairdo is becoming." "What a beautiful dress!" 'I think your date is sharp!"

The praise pasture becomes a veritable wasteland, though, when it comes to compliments for character. It is easy to congratulate a girl for some external nicety; it is not as easy to praise someone for an inner quality. Yet the remark is much more meaningful.

"You were so kind to her when everyone else was mocking her." "I admire for taking your campus when you had looked forward to that movie." "Thank you for being patient while I learn to play bridge.

Compliments-sincere, thoughtful words-are often in our minds, in our hearts, but too seldom on our tongues. We have it in our power to reassure the discouraged student leader, to commend the inconspicuously virtuous girl. We can bring a whole world of love and appreciation into the lives of others. And we can do it all with a few compliments.

Boy Dials Girl

It is now 8:40 p.m. in the dorm . . . only five minutes left for calls . . . at last the phone rings!

To Clarke students in the middle of the week, the telephone becomes almost a lifeline. Dates for the coming weekend hang in the balance with Tracing this call, we find Lorasman Ed Schmidt. Anxious for the call is freshman Carol Neiderriter, while Eileen Fitzmaurice acts as answering service.

Burning nothing but excess calories for fuel, two junior math majors pedal their miles to school each morning, "provided it doesn't rain."

Mary Jo Luedtke and Susan Seipp, both over 5'6" tall, find their 26" bicycles a good fit, and more functional even than in their "youth." "Why, I can save at least 100 minutes each day round-trip!" exclaims Mary Jo.

Swooping down the Post Office Drive at 8 a.m. to park their "completely convertibles" by the post-office door, they hazard a one-handed halt to wave to the cafeteria breakfasters.

Books present no problems, as Susan's vehicle is equipped with two saddle-baskets on the back fender. In fact, she sometimes has to take home extra ones

"to help balance the load." Mary Jo ties her books onto a carrier on the fender, but she has trouble with her usually bulky lunch bag. Living several blocks farther from school than Susan, she carries it in her teeth to their meeting place on University Avenue. Then she trusts the priceless package to Susan's baskets and driving prowess.

Other than little boys pointing fingers at them and big boys in convertibles challenging them to "drag races," the bicyclists' route has become routine.

They have so perfected their technique that the run across the Clarke-Locust intersection at Senior High is barely a gamble anymore. Susan has even learned to keep skirts free from greasy chains.

Gas station attendants, where they stop for tire re-fills, no doubt consider the venture profitless. But Mary Jo and Susan's enthusiasm for it is boundless. Their only wonder is why they didn't take up the practice two years earlier.

The course, offered from June 25 to July 31, is open to teachers, college and high school students, and others eager for summer stock experience. High school students merit one unit of high school credit, and college students gain three hours credit in education or speech and drama.

In the five-week season, participants take classes in acting, play production, stage crafts, body technique and make-up. General rehearsals for the four productions are held from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. every day but Sunday. Extra time is devoted to individual rehearsal.

Each week the summer workshop company presents a different children's play. "Heidi" and "Cinderella" were among last year's presentations.

Tryouts for applicants will be held Monday and Tuesday, June 25 and 26 from 10 a.m. until noon. Honors . . . A few acting scholarships are available. During the summer theater season students live in
